NOTES

CHINA-DISARMAMENT: Peking for the first time has made specific proposals for a possible reorganization of the Geneva Disarmament Conference, under which China would join.

Peking wishes to participate from the beginning in any discussions on reorganization. The proposal described by the Chinese would maintain limited membership in the negotiating body but would allow non-members to attend. The Chinese have criticized the conference's composition, particularly its "bloc-to-bloc" characteristics, and US-Soviet co-chairmanship but have kept open China's option to join eventually. The current initiative, although showing China's interest, does not indicate that Peking is prepared to move rapidly. Consultations on reorganization proposals are likely to continue over an extended period.
